

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Baltimore, Maryland, July 13, 2021. Platemark is a new, independent podcast about art and ideas created and produced in Baltimore, MD, by Ann Shafer. In Platemark Series One, Shafer and co-host Ben Levy (formerly colleagues at the Baltimore Museum of Art) converse about issues facing the artworld with a focus on museums, curatorial work, critiques and studio visits, value (market and conceptual), redefining the art historical canon, and prints, printmaking, print fairs, and print publishing. They attempt to demystify looking at and assessing works of art, the idea of the curator/scholar in the white tower, and the museum as an imposing marble edifice. Included are discussions about decolonization and social justice, what it meant to them to be able to teach young artists in the museum's print study room, and why prints are the best. They hope by drawing back the curtain, the rarified world of the museum may be opened further to listeners.

“As a curator, my mission is to convert people into art- and print-lovers. I often refer to myself as a print evangelist, and Platemark is my megaphone. Listen and find out why prints are awesome.” —Ann Shafer

Platemark Series Two will dive into the history of Western prints and printmaking. Shafer is joined by art historian and printmaker Tru Ludwig for conversations about the social context and history of printmaking in the Western world. Over multiple episodes, they will discuss various landmarks of print history, including works by Albrecht Dürer, Rembrandt van Rijn, Francisco de Goya, Honoré Daumier, Mary Cassatt, Käthe Kollwitz, Elizabeth Catlett, Edward Hopper, and many more. Links to images of the prints covered will be provided in the episode show notes.

Platemark Series Three will feature interviews by Shafer with artists, print publishers and dealers, master printers, curators, gallerists, and scholars.

To date, four episodes of the first series have been released on Apple, Spotify, Amazon Music, and Pocket Casts, as well as at www.platemarkpodcast.com.

Platemark creator and host Ann Shafer is an independent curator with more than twenty-five years of experience in major museums and specializes in the field of prints, drawings, and photographs. Series One co-host Ben Levy is a PhD candidate in art history at Case Western Reserve University in Cleveland, OH, who specializes in prints and photographs. Shafer and Levy worked together at the Baltimore Museum of Art (BMA) for six years and, most notably, co-directed the BMA's Baltimore Contemporary Print Fair in 2012 and 2015. Series Two co-host Tru Ludwig is an artist, founder and master printer at Purple Crayon Press, and professor at the Maryland Institute College of Art.
